

Consultation

What is Consultation?

Consultation in career readiness means talking to people who can guide you when you're unsure about your career choices. It could be a teacher, a student counsellor, your parents, an elder sibling, or even a friend who knows something helpful. When you consult others, you get new ideas, clear your doubts, and learn from their experiences. It's not about doing what they say blindly, it's about listening, thinking, and then deciding what feels right for you. No one figures out their career alone, and asking for help shows that you're being smart and careful about your future.

Why is it important?

Consultation is important for career readiness because it helps you when you feel confused or unsure about your future. By talking to teachers, parents, or counsellors, you'll know what's best for you and learn from their experiences. This makes it easier to choose what's right for you. It also saves you from making mistakes or feeling lost later. You don't have to figure everything out alone asking for help is a way to make better career choices.

Ask Questions to People Who Know More

Insight

When you ask questions, you clear your confusion early instead of staying stuck.

Example: Arya felt lost choosing between Biology and Computer Science. So they asked the science teacher, and that chat made them realize they enjoyed coding more!

Join Career Webinars or Workshops

Insight

These sessions open your mind to career options you never thought about.

Example: Teja attended an online psychology workshop and found out about Sports Psychology a cool career they didn't even know existed!

Talk to Family Members Working in Different Fields

Insight

Family members can give real-life advice that Google can't.

Example: Chaitanya asked their uncle, who works in marketing, and learned that creativity, not just selling, is a big part of that job. It made them think about branding as a career.

→ Discuss with Friends Who Know New Stuff

Insight

Friends can sometimes surprise you with career ideas you never knew.

Example: Sunny's friend spoke about UX Design a career they hadn't heard of. After checking it out, Sunny realized it matched their love for design and problem-solving.

→ Join Online Career Groups or Communities

Insight

You can learn a lot just by reading what others ask or share.

Example: Sunny joined a student group on LinkedIn and found out about online internships in graphic design that they could do right from home!

→ Ask for Feedback on Your Work

Insight

Honest feedback shows what you're good at and what you can get better at.

Example: Kiran shared their blog with the English teacher. The teacher said, "You write like someone who could rock in content creation or marketing!" Kiran felt excited to explore this.

→ Talk to a Career Counsellor or Psychologist

Insight

They help match your interests and talents with the right career path.

Example: Anmol met a counsellor and did a small test and realized they loved debating and logic, which meant law was a better fit than engineering!

→ Visit Career Fairs at School or College

Insight

Career fairs are a great way to meet real people doing real jobs.

Example: At her school's career fair, Teja spoke to a social media expert and learned that digital marketing needs both creativity and data skills and found it super interesting!
